

To whom it may concern,

The Domestic Violence course taught to the Medical Magnet impacted my life not only as a student, but also as a link to my people outside of school. I never knew that domestic violence affected numerous amounts of people I even talk everyday. It accounts to thirty percent of all emergency room visits by women. This course is worth the while to listen to, and Mr. Thicklin did a fabulous job in presenting how domestic violence is an epidemic that needs to be stopped. It is relatively imperative for children of all ages, especially teenagers, to see how hazardous Domestic Violence actually is in society. Relying on a person whether male or female in an abusive relationship can take a turn for the worst. Just because they shower you with gifts and faulty excuses for abusing you, it doesn't take away the callous emotional and mental scars, which last a lifetime. The school system nationwide should join hand in hand with the Domestic Violence program to ensure that all people whether parents, students, or even the teacher themselves have a basic knowledge about domestic and ways to protect themselves, their families, and their communities. The more vast the knowledge about Domestic Violence and Abuse Therapy programs in our schools, homes, and businesses, the better America can control Homeland Security.

Sincerely,
