

To whom it may concern:

Inceptively, I would like to thank the Destiny By Choice organization for sending a public speaker to inform myself, and as well as my other student peers on the topic of domestic violence.

Mr. J.R. Thicklin was a pleasure to listen and talk to. His personal charm, candor and persistence with us, helped in the learning process. I personally enjoyed his ability to relate to the rest of my student peers in which, we are all capable of becoming victims of domestic violence, regardless of shape, size, sex, or ethnic background. Also, in understanding that we may all become abused, we are also equally capable of helping in the prevention of the spread of domestic violence. The dramatic stories, videos, and recordings impacted my view of this commonly overlooked, universal problem. Mr. Thicklin's personal family experience demonstrated to me how unexpected a domestic violence case may be in the family. The overall workshop has made me aware of what methods I need to carry out, in order to stop and/or prevent domestic violence within my home, community, and school.

This workshop has made me, and other students realize that the prevention of domestic violence starts with the self, and works its way out and onto others. It begins with the love and confidence a person may have in themselves and then progresses through courteous and considerate actions towards others. This simple concept makes it a worthwhile experience to have public speakers on behalf of domestic violence, speaking throughout schools and other groups. The smallest step a person can do to stop domestic violence, can ultimately lead to the prevention of future domestic violence cases.

Sincerely,
